Responding to the Self-Study Report

Elena Cole and Justin Garoupa

---

- According to ACCJC, “An institution-wide dialogue must be at the heart of the self-evaluation process for the community college to gain a comprehensive perspective of the college.”
- Reading and responding to this report is one way that every member of the LPC community can participate in telling our story, helping us tell it well.

Why read and respond to this report?

- Accreditation team members will read and consider all feedback, incorporating it as appropriate.
- This feedback is an essential part of the self-study, necessary to insure the authenticity and integrity of the process and the quality of the report.
- According to ACCJC, “A college-wide dialogue that integrates the elements of the Standards provides the complete view of the institution that is needed to verify the integrity and to promote quality and improvement.”

How will feedback be used?

All feedback is welcome! But we have questions to guide your response, should you find it helpful. We'd like to know about:

- Inaccuracies
- Missing Information
- Additional Evidence

What sort of feedback is needed?

- Please read the whole report. It is a rough draft, and we are in the process of revising. We need your participation; this is how you can help with the accreditation effort.
- However, giving feedback to the whole report can be overwhelming. So we have provided a list to help you focus on sections which may speak to your area of expertise.

What would be most helpful?

March 31, 2015.

Due to time restraints, feedback offered after this date may not be incorporated.

When is the deadline?

The self-study report is available on the LPC Accreditation wiki under “Faculty + Staff,” “Accreditation Wiki Login”: acclpc.editme.com.

Once you’re on the wiki, to provide feedback,

- click on “Log In”
- Username: `acclpc`
- Password: `lpcacc`

Where is the self-study report located?

---

- Today, from 3:30 – 4:30.
- We have computers in Room 2416 and Room 502 available. An accreditation team member will be present in each room in case there are questions or concerns.

When can everyone get started?

Thank you for your help!
